1. Grass Identification course

This course covers the significance of grasses, the art of grass identification, and hands-on practical training. Participants will engage in field exercises to learn the key features for identification and discuss the ecological value associated with each grass species. Ideal for those who wants to refresh their grass knowledge or beginning their grass journey.

2. Veld assessment

This course explores the most utilized methods for collecting and analysing data to assess or monitor veld condition, ecological carrying capacity, and botanical diversity (with references made to land capability and ecological function). The program includes a blend of theory, practical data collection, and data analysis.

3. Grazing management

Gain insights into the crucial ecological principles that underlie grazing management. Explore various grazing management systems and approaches, and understand the conditions (climate, terrain, veld condition) that make a particular grazing management approach most suitable.
